Global H2O Drills First Well in Cameroon

Thanks to the hard work of the German community, Global H2O drilled its first-ever well in the west Africa nation of Cameroon this week. Our team was on-site in the village of Mbah, which lies in a hilly region northwest of Cameroon, 400 kilometers from the capital Yaoundé.

Despite a vast water table beneath the surface, Africa is known for its water problem. The real problem is the lack of access to clean water. In many countries, there is simply not enough availability of clean water to match the needs of the population.

The well project in Mbah has been anticipated for a long time by the local community. Many residents thought it was just a rumor and can hardly believe that the drill team was there, ready to work. Measures have been taken to transport water from the new well via pipes to the marketplace and healthcare center. The Global H2O team onsite will organized a training session for the local water committee to ensure that the well is operated and maintained properly.

On location for Global H2O were Mathis Biermann from Germany and Sammy Ndzelen. Last year, the two came up with the idea for the project based on Sammy's accounts of the water problem in his homeland. Mathis drove the fundraising effort on several fronts. In 2017 he hosted a fundraising dinner in Germany that raised about half the money need to build the well. The remaining funds came from Mathis' work with a local charity called "Kinder der Sonne", as well as generous donations from friends and coworkers.
